Brent Leads Poli Sci Forum

Joseph Brent of the history department will lead the Political Science Forum's first discussion of the year next Thursday, Nov. 19, at 8 p. m. in the Brafferton.

Brent's topic will be "Liberalism vs. Conservatism: An Answer to the Twentieth Century."

In his discussion, Brent will cover the reversal of the meanings of "liberal" and "conservative" during the past century.

Points in Brent's discussion will also include the role of the two philosophies in past, present and future, the effects of the 1964 election upon the Republican party, and the increasing trend towards federalism in government.

Brent, now in his first year at William and Mary, received his A.B. in history from Princeton and his Ph.D. from University of California in Los Angeles. He has worked for the Central Intelligence Agency for three years and has also taught at Louisiana State University in New Orleans.

At the next meeting of the Political Science Forum, Dec. 2, Anthony L. Sancetta of the economics department will lead a seminar on economic aspects of contemporary life as related to liberal and conservative philosophies.
